

Endquote

Through doors, out the windows

The air was so damp that fish could have come in through doors and swum out the windows, floating through the atmosphere in the rooms.

— from “One Hundred Years of Solitude” by Gabriel García Márquez